Dear Mr. Kendall:

Thank you for your call earlier today. As suggested by you in your phone message I am emailing to provide you with the written sentiments that I expressed in my phone call to you earlier this week.

I just wanted you to know how fortunate both my husband, John and I feel about our neighbors, Patsy and Curtis Fox. We were so lucky to have them purchase their home on Crump road and be our next door neighbors. They are lovely individuals and their kids are equally nice kiddos. The people who previously owned that home and property were not the best sort of neighbors so we just tolerated them and kept our distance. Patsy and Curtis have been the nicest of people from the first time that we had any contact with them. They are kind and helpful folks and have offered on many occasions to help take down the few remaining burned trees that we have at the back of our property. They are not intrusive people, they are very humble people with such kind demeanors. I want you to know that we are more than happy to support them in their business venture. My husband and I know that our property line is the longest of the property lines that border the Fox's property and we love having them as our neighbors.

It is my hope that I have conveyed in this email the same sentiment that I hoped I conveyed in my voice mail. Just know that we are supportive of them and feel fortunate to have them next door to us.

Thank you for taking the time to read and include my email in their file.

Sincerely yours.
